National Social Welfare Assembly Meets In New York City

The question of how social welfare agencies can cooperate with other community forces to alleviate critical problems such as inadequate housing, juvenile delinquency and city deterioration was the main topic of discussion at the 15th Annual Meeting of the National Social Welfare Assembly which was held December 8 and 9 at the Biltmore Hotel in New York City.

About 300 lay and professional representatives from organizations throughout the country attended the sessions. Theme for the meeting was "Joining Forces to Combat Community Problems."

Harrison Salisbury, "New York Times" correspondent, delivered the major address, "Mobilizing the City for Its Problems," at the luncheon meeting on December 9. Mr. Salisbury is widely known for his "Times" articles on juvenile delinquency, urban deterioration and other metropolitan problems as well as for his book, "The Shook-Up Generation," which deals with the problems of youth in our cities.

Community leaders presented case illustrations of cooperative action which has met community needs at the opening session which was chaired by Miss Jane Hooey, member of the Assembly executive committee.

The National Social Welfare Assembly was organized in 1945 as a central national planning and coordinating body for the social welfare field.

Through the Assembly, the major voluntary national social welfare organizations, Federal Government agencies and some 250 local communities pool their knowledge and experiences for coordinated program planning.

The American Social Hygiene Association is one of the Assembly's sixty-nine affiliate organizations.

ASHA READING SUGGESTIONS

NEW WAYS IN SEX EDUCATION

"New Ways in Sex Education" by Dorothy Walter Baruch is another useful guide for parents who want to help their small fry toward a better understanding of themselves, their beginnings and growth into maturity. Especially helpful (and often amusing and surprising) are the quotations from parent-child conversations on matters related to sex and human growth.

Emphasis is on the social and psychological nature of sex as well as on the biological.

A section of illustrated stories that may serve as models for giving sex information to children is included.

It is published by the McGraw-Hill

Book Co. of New York City, and sells for $3.00.

THE PARENT-TEACHER PARTNERSHIP

"The Parent-Teacher Partnership" by Ernest Osborne points up, in a new and refreshing way, the need for good parent-teacher relationships and discusses the reasons why they are often not "good" enough. With the child as focus, both roles are examined—the parents' and the teachers'—with emphasis on the need to narrow the gap between the home and the school.

This would be an excellent pamphlet to read and discuss at a parent-teacher study group.

It is available through the Bureau of Publications, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, N. Y. Cost is sixty cents per copy.
